1.06 Theory of Change

The pathway to accomplishing our goals.

1.07 Core Programs

Literacy Program

Room to Read's Literacy Program transforms primary schools into a child-friendly learning environment that enables children to develop the skills and habit of reading throughout primary school and become lifelong, independent readers.

Our intervention includes ensuring the school has a library with books in the children's local language, as well as teachers and librarians who are trained in the best practices of reading and writing instruction. Key to our program is ensuring that families, communities and governments are all engaged in the transformation of the school and committed to its success. This includes working closely with governments to integrate library services and books into national government curriculum and instruction.

Our Literacy Program components are like pieces of a puzzle. When all the pieces are in place, children have the resources and support they need to become independent readers. In many of the communities with which we partner, Room to Read works with schools to implement all of the activities needed for children to become independent readers - fitting together every piece of the puzzle. In other communities, we provide support and programming on activities if others are already being conducted effectively by the school, the local government, or another organization.

Girls' Education Program

Room to Read's Girls' Education Program ensures that girls complete secondary school and have the skills to negotiate key life decisions. Our program reinforces girls' commitment to their own education, works with girls to develop essential life skills and increases support for girls' education among their parents, school staff, and communities.

Key to our program are our social mobilizers, local women who are hired as mentors and work with girls and their families to ensure that girls stay in school, participate in activities, and navigate the challenges of adolescence with the ability to make their own life choices, both personally and professionally.

While many countries have made great strides in keeping girls in primary school, huge imbalances persist, particularly as girls transition into secondary school. The Girls' Education Program is vital for increasing community support for gender equality in education, demonstrating effective and efficient models that governments and other organizations can take to scale, and for helping program participants achieve their dreams.

5.0 Photography

The Room to Read story can best be told with positive and inspiring photographs of the children and communities our work seeks to affect. A photograph of a young girl or boy intensely reading a library book immediately conveys our work and our values to the public. We strive to depict the joy of reading and the empowering effects of education in all of our images.

Our photographic style is colorful and vibrant. We aim to show the positive results of our programs in action, and to portray the dignity and unique character of each child, teacher, mentor and parent we photograph.

Room to Read's worldwide communications team is in constant need of high-quality photographs for our print materials and our website. The following pages offer some suggestions of the types of images we are seeking.

- 5.01 Formal Portraits
- 5.02 Informal Portraits
- 5.03 Reading and Learning
- 5.04 Narrative
- 5.05 Perspective and Composition
- 5.06 Sense of Place and Storytelling
- 5.07 Students with Teachers and Mentors
- 5.08 At Home
- 5.09 Room to Read Events & Activities
- 5.10 Friendship and Camaraderie
- 5.11 Focus on Education
- 5.12 To and From School
- 5.13 Lighting
- 5.14 File Management and Cataloging
- 5.15 Photo Credits and Copyrights

5.01 Formal Portraits

The focus of a portrait is a person or a small group of people. In a formal portrait, the subject or subjects are purposefully placed and looking directly at the camera.

5.02 Informal Portraits

An informal portrait catches a person in action or in the course of their day, and is more spontaneous than a formal portrait. Subjects may or may not be looking directly at the camera.

5.03 Reading and Learning

Photographs of young students reading and learning are the strongest and most direct visual communication of our programs and their benefits.

5.04 Narrative

A series of images depicting the same person (or group of people) in their daily routine creates a narrative story. A narrative could include photos of your subject at school or at home, doing their chores, at play or quietly studying, or with friends and family.

5.05 Perspective and Composition

Always consider the placement of your subject, what to include in the photo, and the camera angle. Shooting children from above—the adult point of view—makes children appear more childlike. Shooting children at eye level or from below places the viewer at the child's point of view. For an intimate photo, shoot your subject up close.

5.06 Sense of Place and Storytelling

Photographing people in their environment tells a story about where they live, their daily life, and the people in their community. To capture a sense of place, position your subject closer to the camera, with the environment behind them, or use a wide angle lens to capture a library, classroom or landscape.

5.07 Students with Teachers and Mentors

Teachers, mentors and Room to Read partners are an important part of our story. Casual interactions or group portraits capture the student-mentor relationship.

5.08 At Home

Our Girls' Education Program supports a healthy integration of the domestic and academic life of our participants. Capturing our students at home promotes our holistic approach to girls' education.

5.09 Room to Read Events & Activities

At Room to Read, we celebrate the joy of education through library and school openings and community events. Documenting these events records milestones in our growth and our history.

5.10 Friendship and Camaraderie

School friendships are a memorable part of every child's education. They present an opportunity to capture the infectious enthusiasm and unconditional joy of children in the schools and communities where we work.

5.11 Focus on Education

The heart and soul of our work happens at school and in the library. Showing students actively engaged in reading programs and in the classroom is an essential part of communicating our mission.

5.12 To and From School

In many of the countries where we work, children and teachers often travel long distances to school and back. Capturing this daily routine in photos makes a bold statement about their dedication and commitment to education.

5.13 Lighting

Proper exposure is necessary to illuminate your subject. Always meter for your subject—not for the background. Soft natural light (early morning and early evening) is an optimal lighting situation for photographing people, creating warmth and mood.

5.14 File Management and Cataloging

In order to create an efficient and organized photo archive, all images should be properly formatted and cataloged.

A. File Type and Size

Whenever possible, photos should be shot as RAW files. If your camera does not support the RAW file format, always set your camera to shoot at the highest resolution possible.

Final selected RAW files should be properly named and numbered (see below), and sent to the Global Office.

Additionally, your selected RAW files should also be converted to the following file formats for print and web use.

For print: Convert your RAW file to a high resolution TIFF (approximately 30 Megabytes)

For web: Convert your RAW file to a low resolution jpeg. The long side of your image should measure approximately 800 megapixels at 72 DPI.

B. Cataloging System

All images should be cataloged by name and number. Please use the following system when cataloging each image:

Country Office Abbreviation_Photographer's Name_
Location_Month.Year_Image Number.

Example: IN_D.Rathod_Day School.New Delhi_06.10_15

5.15 Photo Credits and Copyrights

All images used by Room to Read must be from known sources, and may only be used if permission has been granted by the photographer or home office.

©Andrea McTamane

©Andrea McTamane

A. Photo credit accompanying the photo

Font: The Sans Plain or Helvetica Regular

Size: 5.5 pt.

Color: Black or Room to Read Light Grey

B. Photo credit lists
